Mayor's sobriety coach accused of kicking protester

News conference goes off the rails. Shirtless protester denies having first pushed chief of staff

At Mayor Rob Ford's first publicly accessible news conference since returning from rehab last week, his message was barely audible over the shouts from a group of protesters demanding he resign.

Ford's chief of staff, Dan Jacobs, tried to run defence by calling police. Ford's newly hired sobriety coach, who has been identified as Bob Marier, allegedly kicked a protester.

Jacobs attempted to block a shirtless protester, John Furr, from view of the cameras — many of which carried the spectacle, at the corner of Eglinton Avenue and Westover Hill Road, live to audiences.

A CityNews video shot moments later shows a Toronto police officer accusing Marier of kicking a protester.

"If you want me to help you out, you can't be kicking him," the officer said. "I saw you kick him."

Marier could not be reached for comment. Ford's spokesperson said they would not be commenting.

Little is known about the man; Ford's people have said nothing about him other than he is not "staff."

The CBC reported Marier is a recovering alcoholic and that Ford's staff have confirmed he is coaching the mayor through his problem.

Furr, who appeared shirtless in solidarity with the now-famous teacher who chastised Ford at a Canada Day parade in East York, alleged he was kicked in the leg by Marier.

"I just let it go," Furr told Torstar News Service. "I didn't know that he was actually with the Ford campaign."

Furr said the police officer approached him afterward.

"He ... asked did I want to press charges and I said, 'No,'" Furr said.

The allegations, according to police, are that Furr pushed Jacobs, prompting the kick from Marier.

Furr denies he pushed Jacobs and said he was just trying to get around him when the two collided. He said he would consider speaking to his lawyer if allegations against him continue.

Coun. Doug Ford tried to dismiss the protesters as being "planted from the other campaigns." Ford provided no evidence of his claims.

Surgery.
'Black box' in OR tracks mistakes

A "black box" installed in a Toronto operating room earlier this year has found that surgical teams are making the vast majority of their errors during the same two steps surgery after surgery.

Now researchers are looking at how to reduce those mistakes and prevent similar slips in the future.

Dr. Teodor Grantcharov, who developed the operating room black box compares using the technology to learning how to golf.

"Usually we can't appreciate our performance while we're in the middle of the operation," said Grantcharov, a surgeon at St. Michael's Hospital. "You swing and you think you've done a great job and someone video records it and shows you how you've done and obviously there are so many things to improve."

Three microphones and three cameras began recording all of Grantcharov's surgeries at the end of April as part of the black box project. Two of the cameras film the operating room, while a third internal camera records what's happening inside the patient's body while the surgeon and his team perform minimally invasive surgeries. The video and audio collected is then analyzed by a team, who look at surgical techniques, the surgical team's communication and how they work together, and what kind of hazards exist in the operating room.

An initial pilot recorded about 80 Gastric bypass surgeries and found that 86 per cent of the errors were made during just two steps: suturing and grafting the bowel.

Principal David Debelle of Lawrence Heights Middle School, where shooting victim 31-year-old Abshir Hassan was a teacher, describes Hassan as an outstanding teacher and leader. Inset: Hassan is dead after a shooting in west-end Toronto Tuesday morning. VICTOR BIRO/FOR METRO; CONTRIBUTED

Teacher remembered as 'the best guy ever'

Flemington Road.
Abshir Hassan, 31, is dead following an incident that also left two others injured

One man is dead and two other people were in serious condition after being shot next to a community housing complex on Flemington Road near Allen Road and Lawrence Avenue Tuesday morning.

Police have identified the dead man as 31-year-old Abshir Hassan, a local supply teacher who was passionate about educating youth.

David Debelle, principal of Lawrence Heights Middle School, couldn't fight back the tears when he spoke about the beloved teacher.

"He just gave of himself, always."

Debelle, who knew Hassan for four years, said both students and parents adored him. He was a tremendous role model for everyone.

Hassan began working in the Beyond 3:30 afterschool program at Lawrence Heights for two years while he was studying to become a certified teacher.

"I was so impressed with him and I just really wanted to see him realize his dream of becoming a teacher," said Debelle.

Hassan was hired as a supply teacher at Lawrence Heights and Flemington Public School a year ago and worked with students from grades six to eight.

"He's not a fighter. I've never seen him fight anyone," said a friend who only identified himself as Sam. "He was the best guy ever."

Sam was told by people in the area that Hassan was just moving his car to avoid getting a ticket. "Some people approached him and that was it."

The other two victims were not identified by late Tuesday, but police were saying they are a 22-year-old male and 18-year-old female.

City looks to cut fares for low-income TTC riders

Presto system. Any discount would likely not begin until 2017

Toronto's government has taken a first step toward a TTC fare discount for low-income riders.

Council voted 35-3 on Tuesday to have the TTC and city departments study the discount proposal. A "Policy Framework for Toronto Transit Fare Equity" will be submitted to council by the end of 2015 — after the next election — for another vote.

Any discount would probably not be put in place until 2017, when the Presto fare-card system is expected to be operating throughout the TTC. The TTC would look to find money somewhere else to cover the lost revenue.

"This low-income pass shouldn't come at a cost to other riders. So other riders shouldn't be paying more for their fares. And there also shouldn't be service cuts in order to fund this," said Jennifer Huang, an organizer with the Toronto and York Region Labour Council and the advocacy group TTCriders.

Windsor, Guelph, Kingston and Hamilton, among other cities, already have discount programs for low-income residents. The specifics vary.

Hamilton, for example, offers a limited number of half-price monthly bus passes to employed local residents who receive welfare or disability payments or whose family income falls below the poverty line. The other Ontario cities do not require residents to have a job.

Poor Torontonians disproportionately rely on transit to get to work. Huang said she knows of "many low-income Torontonians who aren't able to afford transit that have to make a difficult choice between buying food and paying for tokens."

The Presto cards will also allow the city government to experiment with specialized fare categories linked to travel time, peak/off hours, distance, or vehicle type. "Moreover, the Presto cards could also be linked to a low-income rider's registration in a discount transit fare program funded by the city or through a partnership with an external organization," the city and the TTC said in a joint report. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Defamation lawsuit

Appeal Court upholds Rob Ford legal victory

Ontario's highest court upheld a legal victory Tuesday for Toronto Mayor Rob Ford against a restaurant owner who had sued him for defamation.

In the same decision, the Court of Appeal for Ontario suggested it is "puzzling" that Ford's brother, who made similar comments, was not also sued.

George Foulidis had sued Rob Ford over comments the mayor made to the Toronto Sun — when he was a city councillor — suggesting an untendered, 20-year leasing deal between Foulidis's company, Tuggs Inc., and the city was corrupt, saying that it "stinks to high heaven."

A lower-court judge dismissed the lawsuit in December 2012, ruling that Foulidis did not prove the comments were directed at him nor that they were defamatory. THE CANADIAN PRESS

4-year battle

Residents stop crematorium from opening

Malton residents opposed to the burning of human bodies near their homes have won a four-year fight to stop a crematorium from opening in their neighbourhood.

On Monday the Ontario Municipal Board dismissed an appeal by Benisasia Funeral Home, which sought to build a crematorium on Derry Rd., directly north of Pearson International Airport, in a location that backs onto a residential neighbourhood. The culturally divisive issue has pit some residents against each other.

"The decision of the OMB is final," said resident Charles Barclay, president of the group Concerned Citizens of Malton.

"I feel very relieved. This issue is now settled once and for all," said Barclay, whose home is right behind the site of the proposed crematorium. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Nearly half Ontario teens text and drive: Survey

The 2013 Ontario Student Drug Use and Health Survey found nearly 50 per cent of students text and drive. ISTOCK

Student Drug Use and Health Survey. Mental health, well-being and risk behaviours assessed

Almost 50 per cent of Grade 12 students who drive and more than one-third of all licensed youth in high school say they've texted while driving in the past year, according to an ongoing survey of Ontario adolescents.

The finding is from the 2013 Ontario Student Drug Use and Health Survey, a wide-ranging biannual measure of youth mental health, well-being and risk behaviours conducted for the Centre for Addiction and Mental Health.

The survey collected data from more than 10,000 middle and high school students through anonymous questionnaires that addressed subjects as varied as whether they feel unsafe at school (15 per cent) to how often they play video games (20 per cent said daily).

Health professionals say the survey results show more needs to be done to warn about the dangers of distracted driving, and when it comes to mental health issues some students — particularly girls — may be unnecessarily falling through the cracks.

Quoted

"(Texting) can increase the chances of being in a collision more than 20 times."

Dr. Robert Mann, a senior scientist with CAMH

"It's a very dangerous behaviour," Dr. Robert Mann, a senior scientist with CAMH, said about texting and driving.

Detecting and preventing mental health problems early has one CAMH scientist concerned about another survey result. Almost 30 per cent of students said there was a time in the past year they wanted to talk to someone about an issue but didn't know where to turn.

Across the board, girls were more likely to rate their mental health as fair/poor (21 vs. 11 per cent), say they have low self-esteem (11 vs. 2 per cent) and to have suffered symptoms of depression and anxiety (36 vs. 17 per cent).

'Nightmare' of a wedding planner gets 10 days in jail

A Toronto-area wedding planner, described by an online poster as a "bride's nightmare," was convicted last week and ordered to pay restitution to six consumers.

Last Thursday, Kitchener resident Karl Usmani, owner of Global Wedding & Events Co. Ltd and Global Events & Imports Inc. in Mississauga, was sentenced to 10 days in jail, two years probation, and ordered to pay nearly $18,000 in restitution. Between 2008 and 2011, eight couples that employed Usmani as their wedding planner filed complaints after their big days were soured when the goods and services they paid for weren't delivered, according to a release from the Ministry of Government and Consumer Services. "One couple's photographer did not show up to the scheduled events," read the release. "Another couple's wedding photos were poor quality and never printed as promised. Couples who tried to cancel their bookings did not receive the refunds they requested."

One of Usmani's victims, Christy Luu, told Metro she was glad Usmani got some punishment for his actions.

"It's good to know there are some consequences to ruining other people's weddings."

Luu went to Usmani back in December 2009 and put down a $1,500 deposit for a photographer under his service. She was guaranteed his availability, but was then told the photographer was fully booked. When she asked for a refund, she said Usmani refused.

"I was living in Waterloo, I would drive into Mississauga and it would take me two hours in the winter and they wouldn't have anything ready," she said.

Luu eventually got her refund from her credit card company. In the end, she decided to elope in Jamaica.

PHOEBE HO/FOR METRO

Convicted of ...

Usmani was convicted of engaging in an unfair practice, failing to refund payment within 15 days of being given notice of cancellation of the consumer agreement, and failing to provide a consumer with a proper contract containing the information required by the Consumer Protection Act.

Washington. Sales of recreational pot begin

Washington on Tuesday became the second state to allow people to buy marijuana legally in the U.S. without a doctor's note as eager customers who lined up outside stores made their purchases and savoured the moment.

People began buying marijuana at 8 a.m. at Top Shelf Cannabis, one of two Bellingham stores that started selling the drug as soon as it was allowed under state regulations. Several dozen people waited outside before the doors opened at the shop in this liberal college town of about 80,000 north of Seattle.

Cale Holdsworth, 29, of Kansas, made the first purchase: two grams of pot for $26.50. As customers applauded, he held his brown bag aloft and said, "This is a great moment."

The start of legal pot sales in Washington marks a major step that's been 20 months in the making.

Washington and Colorado stunned much of America by voting in November 2012 to legalize marijuana for adults over 21, and to create state-licensed systems for growing, selling and taxing pot. Sales began in Colorado on Jan. 1.

Washington issued its first 24 retail licences Monday. An Associated Press survey of the licensees showed only about six planned to open Tuesday. Some were set to open later this week or next, while others said it could be a month or more before they could acquire marijuana to sell.

Washington law allows the sale of up to an ounce of dried marijuana, 16 ounces of pot-infused solids, 72 ounces of pot-infused liquids or seven grams of concentrated marijuana, like hashish, to adults over 21.

A roller-coaster hit a tree branch at the Six Flags Magic Mountain amusement park in Valencia, Calif., Monday, leaving four people slightly injured and keeping nearly two dozen riders hanging six to nine metres in the air for hours as day turned to night.

Two people hurt on the incident were taken to a hospital as a precaution, but all the injuries were minor, fire and park officials said.

Fourth of July weekend gun violence claims 15th victim

Chicago's Independence Day weekend death toll has climbed to 15 with the death of a man who was shot just before midnight Sunday.

Allen was one of more than 50 people shot over the long Fourth of July holiday weekend.

'Prince of Pot' prepares for U.S. prison release

New landscape. Canada's Marc Emery meets a different world upon release

When the poster child for marijuana legalization is released from a U.S. prison later this week, he'll be re-entering a world where many of his ideas have taken root and in some places have sprouted right up.

Marc Emery, Canada's self-styled "Prince of Pot," concludes a five-year sentence on Wednesday and will emerge into a lucrative marijuana landscape, where two U.S. states are now issuing recreational pot licences, medical growers are reaping profits.

The 56-year-old Vancouver resident was extradited to Seattle in May 2010, when he pleaded guilty to selling marijuana seeds from Canada to American customers before serving his time in several U.S. corrections' facilities.

On Monday, Washington state distributed for the first time licences to 24 shopkeepers who will hawk legal marijuana, while New York simultaneously became the 23rd U.S. state to authorize pot as medicinal treatment.

"I wish he hadn't gone to prison," said his wife Jodie Emery in an interview.

She lauded her husband for spurring much of the shift in legal regulations and social consciousness while he's been locked away.

"Marc (can take) a lot of credit for everything happening in the United States. And of course it's a wonderful feeling to see that his mission has been accomplished," said the 29-year-old, who's assumed much of the advocacy work and has been managing their marijuana paraphernalia store.

Emery will be transported on Thursday to a private deportation facility in Louisiana, where paperwork must be completed and a flight booked to Detroit. His estimated return is between Aug. 10 and 25. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Strengthened

"I can't wait to get home to thank you all ... and resume the unfinished battle to finish off marijuana prohibition with renewed vigour."

Marc Emery in his final blog post from prison

It's a hard-knock life for home managers

Dareda Mueller, 56, left, and her son Jordan, 21, wash dishes after the family's dinner together in the home they manage for Showhomes in Tampa, Fla. Showhomes' "home managers" are an elite crew of middle-class nomads who are tasked with keeping the luxury homes they live in so immaculate to the point of not looking lived-in at all. It is, as the company's executives called it, "a very different, very difficult life." To see more photos of how this family lives, scan the picture with your Metro News App.

Bethesda. Scientists find decades-old smallpox vials in FDA building

A government scientist cleaning out an old storage room at a research centre in Maryland made a startling discovery last week — decades-old vials of smallpox packed away and forgotten in a cardboard box.

The six glass vials were intact and sealed, and scientists have yet to establish whether the virus is dead or alive, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention said Tuesday.

Officials said this is the first time in the U.S. that unaccounted-for smallpox has been discovered. At least one leading scientist raised the possibility that there are more such vials out there around the world.

The freeze-dried smallpox samples were found in a building at the National Institutes of Health in Bethesda that has been used by the Food and Drug Administration since 1972, according to the CDC.

The scientist was cleaning out a cold room between two laboratories on July 1 when he made the discovery, FDA officials said.

Second incident

- It was the second recent incident in which a U.S. government health agency appeared to have mishandled a highly dangerous germ. Last month, many CDC employees in Atlanta were feared exposed to anthrax.

No one has been infected, and no smallpox contamination was found in the building.

Smallpox was one of the most lethal diseases in history. For centuries, it killed about one-third of the people it infected. Global vaccination campaigns finally brought smallpox under control.

After it was declared eradicated, all known remaining samples of live virus were stored at a CDC lab in Atlanta and at a Russian lab in Novosibirsk, Siberia.

There has long been debate over whether to destroy the stockpile. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

iPhone makes trip to Japan before being returned to American owner

An Oklahoma farmer's iPhone that was lost when it fell into a grain elevator has been returned to him unscathed after it was found in Japan.

Kevin Whitney lost the phone in October when it slipped out of his shirt pocket as he was unloading grain from a truck into a silo in Chickasha.

The load travelled to a depot in Convent, Louisiana, and then loaded onto a ship bound for the island of Hokkaido, Japan. A worker at a Japanese facility phoned a counterpart in Louisiana, who then called Whitney in late May asking if he lost an iPhone.

Whitney says he's glad to get the phone back because it had photos stored on it from his daughter's wedding and vacation, and he thought those were lost forever.

Critics blast pledge of $20M: 'Inadequate' to help sex workers leave

'It's a start, but that's all it is.' The five-year commitment from the Harper government is not part of Bill C-36

A diverse chorus of aboriginal women, police leaders and former prostitutes took turns Tuesday denouncing as insufficient the Harper government's five-year, $20-million pledge to help sex workers leave the industry.

The steady barrage of criticism came on the second day of rare summer hearings by the House of Commons justice committee as it examines Bill C-36, the government's proposed new prostitution bill.

The offer of funding fits the so-called "Nordic model" that several Scandinavian countries have adopted to fight prostitution, and which the Harper government's proposed legislation appears designed to emulate.

In addition to making it illegal to be a client or a pimp, the Conservative government approach calls for social spending to help exploited women get out of the sex industry.

Justice Minister Peter MacKay has said the government hopes the funding, along with the new bill will foster an end to prostitution entirely.

"From our perspective, $20 million is peanuts," said Michele Audette, president of the Native Women's Association of Canada.

Audette linked the prostitution issue to the broader problem of missing and murdered aboriginal women in Canada. Aboriginal groups and international organizations have asked the Harper government to conduct a federal inquiry into the problem.

Rick Hanson, Calgary's police chief, described the $20-million pledge, which he said amounts to $125,000 a year in Calgary, as "woefully inadequate."

Hanson said the underlying causes of prostitution — child abuse, drug addiction and domestic violence — need to be addressed.

"I can tell you that $20 million, when you actually spread it across five years, and you spread it across the country, it's a start, but that's all it is — it's a start."

The Supreme Court of Canada struck down the existing prostitution law last December and gave the government one year to bring in a replacement.

The $20-million commitment is an additional government commitment to help women get out of the sex industry, but it is not part of the actual bill. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Rocket attacks. Israel steps up Gaza offensive

The Israeli military launched a major offensive Tuesday in the Hamas-ruled Gaza Strip, striking more than 100 sites and mobilizing troops for a possible ground invasion in what Israel called an operation aimed at stopping a heavy salvo of rocket attacks from the Palestinian territory.

At least 19 Palestinians, including three children, were killed in the air and sea attacks, officials said. Israel's military said it targeted the homes of Hamas operatives allegedly involved in rocket fire, militant compounds and concealed rocket launchers.

Israeli officials said the army has been authorized to mobilize an additional 40,000 troops. By nightfall, the army said, it had mobilized half of the forces. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Afghanistan election

Presidential hopeful cries fraud in runoff

Afghan presidential candidate Abdullah Abdullah defiantly told thousands of supporters Tuesday that he will declare victory in the election, claiming massive fraud was responsible for preliminary results that put his rival in the lead.

Results from the June 14 runoff show former finance minister Ashraf Ghani Ahmadzai well in the lead for the presidency — a sharp turnaround from the first round of voting on April 5 when Abdullah garnered the most votes with 46 per cent to Ahmadzai's 31.6 per cent. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Alberta court orders Khadr transferred to provincial jail

Appeal planned. The federal government says it now will ask the Supreme Court to hear the case

Alberta's top court has granted an application by Omar Khadr, seen in this artist's sketch from last year, to be transferred to a provincial jail.
AMANDA MCROBERTS/THE CANADIAN PRESS

Alberta's top court has granted an application by former Guantanamo Bay detainee Omar Khadr to be transferred to a provincial jail.

The Appeal Court has ruled the 27-year-old should have been serving a youth sentence in Canada.

"We have concluded that the chambers judge erred in law in finding that Khadr was properly placed in a federal penitentiary under the ITOA (International Transfer of Offenders Act)," the court wrote in its unanimous decision, released Tuesday. "We conclude that Khadr ought to have been placed in a provincial correctional facility for adults."

The federal government said it plans to appeal the ruling and it will apply to delay the transfer while it asks the Supreme Court to hear the case.

"Omar Ahmed Khadr pleaded guilty to heinous crimes," Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney said in a statement. "We have vigorously defended against any attempt to lessen his punishment for these crimes."

After spending a decade in Guantanamo Bay, Khadr was sentenced by a U.S. military commission to an additional eight years and sent to Canada. The commission made no distinction between youth and adult punishment or between consecutive and concurrent sentences when it handed him the eight-year term. When he was transferred to Canada in 2012, corrections authorities took him into adult custody.

Khadr's lawyers argued that the eight-year term for crimes that included murder only made sense as a youth sentence and, although he's now too old to be in a youth facility, Khadr should at least be moved to a provincial jail.

Lawyers for the federal government argued that the decision of a foreign court cannot be tampered with and that Khadr had been given eight years as a youth for murder and the sentences on four remaining offences were to be served concurrently as an adult. THE CANADIAN PRESS

A man holds a soda pop bottle as he walks under a sign opposed to taxes on sugary drinks posted in the window of Casa Thai Market in San Francisco Monday.
JEFF CHIU/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Pop taxes going flat?

Bubbled up and over.
Repeated efforts in the U.S. to tax sugary drinks at higher levels, like cigarettes, have failed

If two of the most progressive U.S. cities don't pass a tax on sugary drinks, will the idea finally fizzle out?

Sugary drinks have been under fire for years, with many blaming them for rising rates of obesity and chronic diseases. Yet efforts to curb consumption by imposing taxes and other measures have failed, in part because the beverage industry has spent millions to defeat the efforts.

Now, the question of whether a bottle of Dr Pepper with 64 grams of sugar should be treated like a pack of cigarettes is being considered in San Francisco and Berkeley, with the two California cities aiming to become the country's first to pass per-ounce taxes on sugary drinks.

The stakes are high, especially given the Bay Area's reputation for liberal politics. If approved, Coca-Cola, PepsiCo and other companies fear it could galvanize health advocates elsewhere. If defeated, the idea of a soda tax could be dead.

Potato-salad party?

You like potato, I like potahto — let's have a party!

An Ohio man who jokingly sought $10 US to pay for his first attempt at making potato salad has raised more than $37,000 from a crowdfunding Internet site.

Zack "Danger" Brown, of Columbus says he's now considering throwing a huge public potato-salad party with the money, which started pouring in after his request took on a life of its own.

Six days into the campaign, he's raised money from more than 3,400 backers worldwide. The 31-year-old co-owner of a software company says he hasn't been getting much sleep.

Brown tells The Columbus Dispatch that he did it for the "pure enjoyment and silliness of life." THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SO YOU WANT TO BE A LEMONTREPRENEUR ...

JUST SAYIN'

Paul Sullivan
metronews.ca

OK, kids. School's out. The sun is shining. Are you thinking what I'm thinking?

Yup, it's time to open a lemonade stand.

Don't roll your eyes at me, Buster, and listen up. Lemonade stands are a kid rite of passage. Capitalism with training wheels.

It's easy! The barriers to entry are ridiculously low. All you need is a card table, a hand-painted sign and, of course, a big, frosty jug of product.

Don't worry about all those bylaws and regulations you are no doubt violating. At this stage of the game, everyone thinks you're cute because you're eight. If the cops try to shut you down, you post the bust on Instagram and in no time, you're viral.

It's not until you turn into Conrad Black that you have to worry.

You probably won't be surprised, but the Internet is full of advice for budding lemonade magnates. Ten tips for this, 15 tips for that. It gets so complicated, you might as well go straight to a food truck and skip the MBA altogether.

You really need to keep a couple of key points in mind:

Let's face it. Being cute is your primary product. It helps to have big eyes and dimples. The cuter you are, the more you can charge for the lemonade. If you're not cute, find a partner who is. Plus, if there's more than one of you, you're covered if you have to go to the bathroom.

And speaking of pricing, lemonade expert Norm Brodsky (there is such a thing) recommends charging $1.25-$1.50 a cup because you're cute. That's great, but discount pricing is more effective. Start with 99 cents a cup and escalate by 10 cents for every two-degree increase in air temperature. Cute is good, but thirsty is better. Of course, we don't have pennies anymore, but 99 cents still sounds like a bargain to potential customers and everyone's OK with rounding it up to a buck. If things are slow, offer the second glass free. Works at the outlet mall.

My other tip is don't go all artisan on your first try. Fresh-squeezed local organic lemonade may sound good, but it's expensive and labour-intensive. You want to spend your time counting your profits, not squeezing lemons. You're looking for a reliable, tasty product, which is available at your friendly neighbourhood supermarket. Pour the carton into a jug filled with ice, and eureka: fresh lemonade, not from concentrate. Add a little sugar if you like. Works for Coca-Cola.

Not just kiddie stuff

Just sit there and eventually everyone else will pack it in. Trust me, this works too. Even when you're all grown up.

Don't worry about the competition. At this point, it's all about attention span, and you know from experience that the average eight-year-old's is about four seconds. Just sit there and eventually everyone else will pack it in. Trust me, this works too. Even when you're all grown up.

Finally, do not keep cash on hand. Never forget there are big kids out there who have their own business plan.

And welcome to the real world, sunshine!

DUCKING BRILLIANT

Two-week-old ducks swim in a newly planted rice field on Tuesday in Ichikawa, Japan. Duck-rice farming, an eco-friendly alternative to using chemical pesticides, was developed by Japanese farmer Takao Furuno in 1989, who wrote a book about the technique called The Power of Duck. BUDDHIKA WEERASINGHE/GETTY IMAGES

The Power of Duck: The cuter, more eco-friendly way to farm

Developed in 1989 by Takao Furuno, a farmer in Fukuoka prefecture in Japan who rediscovered a 1,000-year-old technique, duck-rice farming allows for the production of healthy and delicious rice while relying on less labour than other methods.

From its beginnings, it has made its way to nearby rice-growing countries like South Korea, China, Vietnam, the Philippines, Thailand, and faraway ones like Iran.

Rice grown using this method is more resistant to typhoons and other problems, and some farmers who have begun using it have called it a "gift from God."

This method is beneficial from a cost standpoint in that farmers will no longer have to purchase expensive chemical fertilizers or pesticides.

And the fact that extra money can be made when the fully grown ducks are sold off is another factor that many find appealing. WEB-JAPAN.ORG

No quackery here

The method involves releasing aigamo ducklings into a rice paddy about one or two weeks after the seedlings have been planted.

- The ducklings help the rice seedlings grow by eating both insects and weeds that get in the way.
- In addition, their droppings become an important source of natural fertilizer.

Among the rites of spring and early summer are bears shaking off the cobwebs of a very long sleep and lumbering out into the world in search of some breakfast. Sometimes that search takes them into homes. Sometimes it takes them into vehicles.

However, sometimes it also takes them headfirst into a jar, a situation that can have a very sad end if they get stuck. Which is why we're happy for the efforts of heroes like these Wisconsin gentlemen, who enlisted the help of a tree-lugging hunk of heavy equipment called a forwarder to ride to the rescue. Monkey-maker shake up

Suiting up as a simian. Going ape gets simpler as new Dawn of the Planet of the Apes trades time in the make-up chair for the magic of digital

IN FOCUS
Richard Crouse
scene@metronews.ca

Roddy McDowell's 1974 appearance on the Carol Burnett Show was something a little different. How often do you see a big TV star singing a love duet with an ape?

Burnett introduced McDowell as, "one of Hollywood's most familiar faces," then feigned shock when the actor came onstage in a tuxedo, but in full Planet of the Apes facial make-up. McDowell starred in four of the Planet of the Apes films and in the TV series.

For the next few minutes they engaged in some tomfoolery — McDowell says he's been working on his tan in Palm Springs and when asked which of his movies has had the most profound effect on him he sidesteps the obvious and recites a soliloquy from Cleopatra — before launching into a spirited version of the Jerome Kern love ballad They Didn't Believe Me. By the end of the tune the audience roars as Burnett warbles, "When I told them how wonderful you are, they didn't believe me," as she mimes picking a bug off his lapel.

Hair-raising experience

Times have changed since McDowell had to endure untold hours in the make-up chair, then smoke using an extra long cigarette holder so as not to light his faux fur on fire.

- "It's about a foot long and makes me look like the weirdest monkey you ever did see," McDowell told Newsday.

Later she thanks Roddy for undergoing the three-and-a-half hours it took to put on the make-up for that bit of funny business.

It's not likely you'll see Andy Serkis, star of the latest slice of simian cinema, Dawn of the Planet of the Apes, partaking in the same kind of promotional monkey business.

These days Serkis, who is best known for his motion capture performance of Gollum in the Lord of the Rings films, performs on a soundstage in front of multiple cameras that film his performance from every angle. He wears a body suit dotted with spots that allow the computers to register even the slightest movement. Serkis calls this "a magic suit" that "allows you to play anything regardless of your size, your sex, your color, whatever you are." Later, in post production the "digital make-up" adds in the costume and character details.

It saves hours in the make-up chair, but is no less a performance than McDowell's more organic approach. "I've never drawn a distinction between live-action acting and performance-capture acting," Serkis says. "It is purely a technology. It's a bunch of cameras that can record the actor's performance in a different way."

OUR TAKE ON THE WORLD OF CELEBRITIES

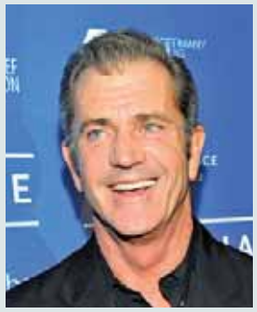
Gibson takes the Mel out of mellowed

NED EHRBAR
Metro in Hollywood



Guys, seriously. Mel Gibson is super-tired of everyone always bringing up his past troubles — specifically that time he got popped for driving under the influence in Malibu, called a female cop some very colourful names and had a few things to say about the Jewish people. But that was, like, a long time ago. "It's behind me. It's an eight-year-old story," Gibson calmly explains to the Hollywood Reporter. "It keeps coming up like a rerun, but I've dealt with it and I've dealt with it responsibly and I've worked on myself for anything I am culpable for. All the necessary mea culpas have been made copious times, so for this question to keep coming up, it's kind of like … I'm sorry they feel that way, but I've done what I need to do."

Also on the list of things Gibson doesn't want to talk about? His upcoming projects. "There are specific things, but I don't want to talk about them, you know why?" he said during the warm and fuzzy chat. "Because every time I do somebody else goes and does it. It's a kind of industrial espionage thing and they do it badly for TV."

Kind of makes you wonder why he even sat down for the interview at all. Oh, right. Expendables 3 comes out next month.

The Hunger Games star headed to Paris for the Christian Dior fashion show held during Paris Haute Couture Fashion Week looking lovely as always, though she did risk a wardrobe malfunction by almost flashing a bit of side-boob upon her arrival. Not that she was at all fazed. Later, with a strategically placed leather jacket added to her outfit, Lawrence showed off her trademark goofiness while posing for photos with Harry Potter star Emma Watson, grabbing Watson's face and shoving it away playfully. Set your sights on a stunning Slovenian cycling adventure

Bike and beyond.
Think you're too old to withstand the rigours of an outdoorsy holiday? Nonsense!

My first reaction to the idea of taking BikeHike's active adventure tour to Slovenia and Croatia (the Alps to Istria) was: "What?", "Where?" and "Why?"

While I am healthy and reasonably fit, I thought I might be too old (over 40) for an adventure tour.

I couldn't have been more wrong.

In fact, more and more people over 40, 50, 60 and even 70 are choosing tours that take you outside the gates of an all-inclusive and into an incredible, active, authentic and connected experience.

After all, 60 is the new 40!

The fact that BikeHike Adventures is celebrating their 20th anniversary this year tells me that they have a lot of experience with these types of tours.

This tour is defined as "moderate," which means you need a reasonable fitness level because you bike, kayak or hike for up to five hours per day.

The good news is that a support vehicle follows the group in case someone needs a break.

The activity level is enough to make you feel like you accomplished something (and appreciate the glass of wine or cold beer at the end of the day), but doesn't push you beyond your limits.

It offers a good balance of activity, relaxation and time to explore local culture.

This eight-day group trip, one of BikeHike's most popular European tours, begins in Slovenia and wraps up in Croatia.

BikeHike's maximum on any trip is 12 people, with a minimum of two, so it is always a small group. The "land only" cost is $2,999 U.S. per person (with no single supplement).

It covers almost everything once you are on the ground, including the tour guide, transportation of your luggage, support vehicle, bikes, kayaks, most meals and even accommodation.

Slovenia and Croatia are largely undiscovered gems, which means it is still possible to have an authentic, "non-touristy" experience.

The regions visited on this tour are a culinary and wine lover's paradise.

They could be compared to some parts of Italy for food, wine and history, but with their own unique and — as yet — undiscovered charm.

Along the way, there is an overnight stay in a mountain hut in the Julian Alps, hiking through green pastures and alpine mountains, cycling and several wine tastings through the Brda wine region (known as "Slovenian Tuscany").

This itinerary goes through lands of castles, vineyards, small white churches and friendly villages.

It is a perfect balance of the road less travelled and the opportunity to step into a magical world full of history and charm — one that hasn't been overwhelmed by tour buses and big groups.

In Croatia, there is more vineyard cycling on the legendary route of the Parenzana, called "The Railway of Wine" — with a rich history of its own.

Visiting local villages and medieval towns along the route brings the past alive.

Meeting locals, making friends in the small tour group, and stepping into moments right out of history creates once-in-a-lifetime memories different from anything you could possibly expect.

Sometimes moving out of your comfort zone takes you into amazing experiences that you never could have imagined and, now, never want to forget.

New York City. Canuck Broadway singer dishes on her favourite haunts in the city that doesn't sleep

ON THE MOVE
Loren Christie
life@metronews.ca

Canadian singer and recent Dora award winner Melissa O'Neil is currently starring in the Broadway production of Les Miserables. I asked her to share some of her favourite New York City haunts.

Where do you grab a bite?
Most tourists in NYC find themselves in the Times Square area. If you go just a couple of blocks west you are in Hell's Kitchen, the hub of everything food. Especially 9th Avenue. I love Vynl cafe; food is amazing and everything is about music. Blossom du Jour at 43rd is vegan fare. They have seitan sandwiches, amazing juices and the squishiest cookies. It is easy to get sucked into pizza joints, but don't. Head to the smaller independent places that use quality ingredients. Grab food to go and find an outdoor park. I like to go to Columbus Circle. If you sit on one of the elevated areas you can see everything; the skateboarder, the business man harrumphing at the skateboarder and the beautiful model lady walking by.

What about a watering hole?
The Rum House on 47th, the decor is dark, romantic and small. They have a huge fan that looks like a plane propeller turned on its side. There is always live music and the servers are great. I usually get sipping tequila or a scotch.

What do you do when you are not working?
I love the museums. Almost all of them are by donation. So if you only have an hour to spare, pop them $5 and go wander around. I really like dinosaurs, so the Natural History Museum is pretty cool. The Cloisters is all medieval stuff, huge old tapestries that are really lovely.

How-to

ISTOCK

Avoid jet lag

1. If travelling east, go to bed an hour or two earlier for a few nights before your flight. Stay up later if you'll be heading west.
2. Eat lightly the day before and try to get a good night's sleep.
3. Drink more water than you thought possible before, during and after your flight: one litre for every hour in the air.
4. The minute you buckle up, set your watch to the time at your destination, and mentally try to align yourself to that time zone.
5. Skip the booze and the sleeping aids on the plane.
6. Avoid naps at the other end, which tend to just prolong the agony. If you do nap, keep them to 30 minutes. DOUG WALLACE/METRO

Getaway

A step above the staycation

Sometimes you don't have to go far to feel like you've gone far away. A prime example is the Hamilton-Halton-Brant region of southern Ontario, home to the Grand River, the Niagara Escarpment and the Bruce Trail. Miles of shoreline, cool waterfalls, museums and historical sites make for both variety and family fun — a weekend escape. There is adventure via paddling, hiking, cycling, exploring and climbing. Things like a two-day waterfall hike can do mind and body a world of good. Visit theheartofontario.com.

Space. Virgin partners with elite hotel

Virgin Galactic appears to be getting closer to reaching its long-delayed goal of launching tourists into space.

The company said Monday it has selected Hotel Encanto de Las Cruces in Albuquerque, New Mexico, as the preferred hotel for its elite roster of passengers, who will pay $200,000 a person to make the flights from Spaceport America. Virgin Galactic also announced a contract with World Class Gourmet of Las Cruces to provide catering for travellers during their training at Spaceport and said it is relocating more of its staff to New Mexico and will be hiring locally in the next few months.

The company is the anchor tenant in the $209 million US Spaceport America that the state built for Virgin Galactic founder Richard Branson to launch his flights from. But the project and Virgin have been plagued by delays. Originally, Branson had said he hoped to launch the flights by the end of 2010. The company is now hoping to begin operations by the end of this year. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Ride your bike or a horse on one of the many trails along Alberta's Cowboy Trail. TRAVEL ALBERTA PHOTOS

There are plenty of ways to get wet along the Cowboy Trail, from jumping in a river at Castle Falls Campground, going fishing or paddling white water near Sundre.

Giddy up to the Cowboy Trail

The Rockies. Rolling hills and winding rivers are a perfect backdrop for a hike and other fun activities

JENNIFER ALLFORD
For Metro

You don't have to ride a horse down Alberta's Cowboy Trail — a 700-kilometre stretch of highway that starts west of Edmonton and goes almost all the way down to the Canada-U.S. border — but you can pull off almost anywhere and find one.

Most of the trail runs along Highway 22, just east of the Rockies in the foothills from the agricultural community of Mayerthorpe to Cardston, a town settled back in 1887 by Mormons from Utah.

This is Alberta's ranch country and pretty much all the way down you'll find working ranches, guest ranches, campgrounds, rodeos, powwows, lots of horseback trail-riding operations and of course, plenty of cattle.

You'll also find some of the prettiest country you'll see anywhere — rolling green hills on one side of the road and big blue Prairie skies on the other. If you're lucky, you'll also see one of Alberta's legendary summer storms, where the sun is shining out one window of the car and bouncing off ominous dark clouds out the other. Be prepared to use your sunglasses and your windshield wipers at the same time. You won't want to miss the rainbow.

You should also keep an eye out for cowboys herding cattle and families out for a ride. Wave. If they're not too busy, they'll probably wave back. Take a few days to get from top to bottom and make sure to pop into a town or two along the way for some cowboy poetry or native dancing. Check out local artisans in Drayton Valley, shop for handwoven fabric in Rocky Mountain House, go white-water paddling near Sundre — and stop anywhere for a hike in the fresh air or a chat with a local over a double-double.

Double up, meanwhile, on chocolate scoops at Mackay's Ice Cream in Cochrane. Take a walk to see the life-sized iron statue of a horse and its rider, and watch for riders in bright jerseys and helmets preparing to cycle up the giant hill just east of town.

At Bragg Creek about half an hour down the road, head out to one of the popular trails for a hike, jump on your bike to join a peloton or head for the hills to go mountain biking.

Further south, visit Turner Valley and mosey on up to the Visitor Information Centre to get the lay of the land. If you have trouble finding the building that looks like it's in old Western movie, just look for the Flare and Derrick Community Hall next door. Down the road in Black Diamond, tour some galleries to see the work of local artisans and pop into Marv's Classic Soda Shop for a coke float and a peanut butter burger. In Longview, a little further south, keep an eye out for Canadian country music legend and authentic cowboy, Ian Tyson. If you miss him, you can always stop in to his Navajo Mug for a slice of pie.

The town of Cochrane has your ice cream fix covered. COURTESY TRAVEL ALBERTA

Speaking of authentic cowboys, you'll learn all about them at Bar U Ranch National Historic Site. At one point, the ranch — which dates back to 1882 — encompassed a massive 157,000 acres to raise cattle and horses. While you're there, take a wagon ride, try your hand at roping some (stationary) steer and hear about Alberta's ranching pioneers. Then head out to see energy pioneers harness alternative energy with row after row of wind turbines near the pretty town of Pincher Creek, the "wind capital" of Canada.

Which just goes to show, you'll find cowboys and then some on Alberta's Cowboy Trail.

Picturesque park more than just designations

Wild life. Waterton is an internationally recognized park, but visitors are more impressed by breathtaking views

As you stand in front of the Prince of Wales Hotel in Waterton National Park, feasting your eyes on the lake that's stretching out in the valley ahead of you, take a second to consider that this gem of a national park at the bottom of Alberta has scored a hat trick of notable international designations.

It's part of an International Peace Park, it's an UNESCO World Heritage site and it's also an UNESCO Biosphere Reserve. Unofficially, but just as importantly, Waterton has been designated by visitors as an outstanding place to go hiking, be gobsmacked by alpine meadows full of wildflowers and mountains that appear to pop out of nowhere.

The lack of foothills leading into the mountains is just one of the unique features at Waterton.

Different lakes and rivers run through it on their way to three different oceans.

It's also, remarkably, home to five different ecoregions — alpine tundra, subalpine forest, montane forest, aspen parkland and fescue grassland. This means you'll find plants from the Prairies to the Pacific Northwest growing in Waterton — in fact you'll find more than half of all the plant species in Alberta growing in the park.

This "unusual rich mosaic of habitats with their associated flora and fauna," is why UNESCO designated Waterton a Biosphere Reserve in 1979, the first Canadian national park to be given the distinction.

But that's not the park's first "first." Back in 1932, Rotary Clubs on either side of the Canada-U.S. border teamed up to get Waterton and its neighbour to the south, the United States Glacier National Park, named as the world's first international peace park.

The Waterton-Glacier International Peace Park was meant to promote goodwill between Canada and the U.S. as well as underscore the international co-operation needed to protect the parks' unique wilderness. The Blackfoot Confederacy has since been added to the mix.

To recognize that co-operative spirit as well as the park's "evolution of plant communities and ecological complexes that occur nowhere else in the world," UNESCO named the Waterton-Glacier International Peace Park a world heritage site in 1995.

There's also loads of wildlife, including birds, mountain goats, bighorn sheep, coyotes, elk, moose and both grizzly and black bears.

And while you'll see plenty of deer roaming around the townsite snacking on green spaces, you won't find lineups of tourists waiting to take pictures in front of Waterton Lake.

So as you take your time taking pictures in front of a waterfall during a hike, you may want to consider adding another designation to Waterton's long and impressive list of important recognitions — the top spot on your list of favourite destinations.

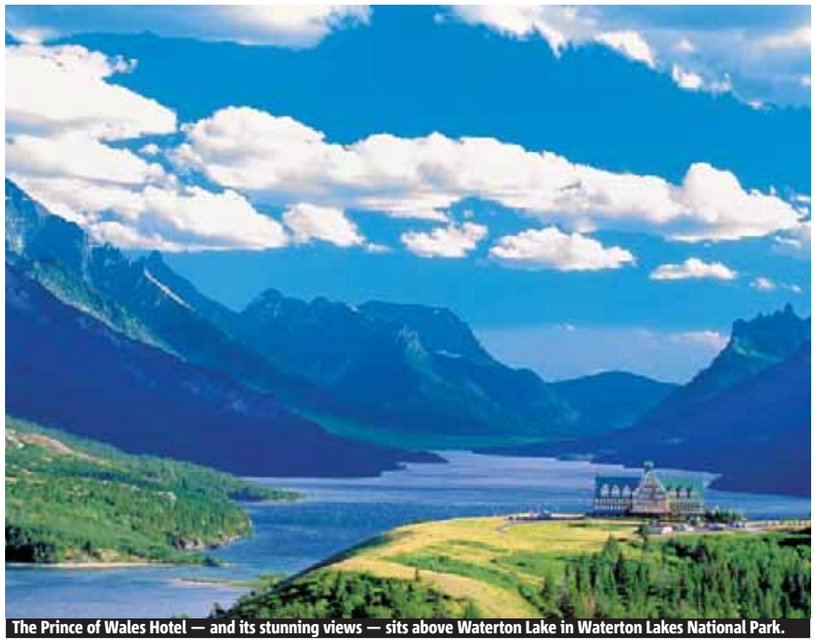
JENNIFER ALLFORD/FOR METRO

Hit the hills for some hiking

A couple of hikers make it to the top of the Alderson-Carthew Trail in Waterton Lakes National Park.

Waterton attracts more than big international awards and distinctions.

- Hikers flock to the park to explore a variety of trails in the 526-square-kilometre park. Hardcore hikers take a full day for the 2,300-foot Crypt Lake Trail that starts and ends with a ferry ride and includes a tunnel, cliffs and stunning views of a 600-foot waterfall. Or pop in and out of B.C. on the Akamina Ridge, another full-day hike.
- For people who would prefer a shorter hike, or even just a stroll, there are lots of options among the 255-kilometres of trails in the park. There's also fishing, boating, horseback riding and golfing.



The Prince of Wales Hotel — and its stunning views — sits above Waterton Lake in Waterton Lakes National Park.

Waterfalls are common to see along the 255-kilometres of trails in the park. GOVERNMENT OF ALBERTA PHOTOS

There's more than a bed at Hotel Zed

Victoria. Kitschy hotel in British Columbia was the decade-long passion project of one driven hotelier

When was the last time you played table tennis at a hotel? Probably never.

Or spent time in a hotel lobby listening to vinyl records on a state-of-the-art turntable while lounging in a purple chair that could easily accommodate a small family? Likely also never.

Called room service with an old-school rotary-dial phone, or taken a ride in a hotel shuttle bus that happens to be a 1967 orange and blue VW van? Not since 1967 — maybe.

Hotel Zed (pronounced the Canadian way) is the retro-kitsch dream of Victoria, B.C., hotelier Mandy Farmer, whose idea of a hotel experience involves fun things to do while staying in funky rooms decked out in purple, blue and black geometrically challenged carpets, even brighter-coloured Jetsons-era furnishings and framed street-cred Victoria graffiti tags on the walls.

Farmer, president and CEO of British Columbia's Accent Inns hotel chain, says Hotel Zed, which opened recently, is the happy ending to her decade-long vision of offering an edgy, eclectic, modern and retro accommodation experience in Victoria that rebels against the ordinary.

"I wanted to create a place that was fun," says Farmer, 40, whose business card identifies her as a rebel and bike lover. "It's ridiculously fun. This is really out there, the mix of new and old, but not just old."

She says she pitched her cutting-edge Zed zeitgeist hotel dream to the bottom-line-conscious Accent Inns directors at annual planning meetings for at least a decade and always received the same firm answer: no. "'Mandy, give up, move on, you've got to do something else. Why would anyone want to sit in an old car?"' was the answer. "But I couldn't stop dreaming about it."

The conservative mood in the boardroom started to shift as the global economy struggled, and Farmer's pitch for a new Victoria-vibe hotel concept was greeted with fresh ears at the executive level, she says.

Two years later, and with at least $1 million invested, the 62-room Hotel Zed has risen from what was a traditional mid-town, street-front, box-like hotel that formerly served as an independent hotel owned by the company.

Farmer stands outside the hotel lobby and points to the jagged, diamond-shaped facade.

"We had these hideous awnings covering this," she says. "As soon as we took them off and I saw this, I knew we could do something with this property."

The formerly bland white hotel wall that faces Douglas Street, Victoria's main artery downtown, has been painted over with what looks like a Rubik's Cube of pink, purple, orange and lime squares.

Farmer says the wall has become an unofficial photo studio as groups of people, including parade marching bands and wedding parties, stop to pose in front of the almost psychedelic backdrop.

Festival d'été runs until Sunday, July 13. LIA GRAINGER/METRO

Festival d'été the best kept secret in Quebec

Summer sounds.
Massive music fest brings in big names, but still draws few from outside the province

LIA GRAINGER
life@metronews.ca

"I am so excited to be here tonight," gushed a sequin-clad Lady Gaga to a field of 80,000 screaming fans at Québec City's Festival d'été last Friday night. "This is the biggest show we've ever done."

What started as a tiny francophone music festival 47 years ago has grown into an 11-day extravaganza that today leaves even the most legendary of pop stars awestruck.

With 10 stages scattered across Quebec City's picturesque old town, 300 music acts, and a program that offers everything from pop, rock and indie, to international folk, world, and blues acts, the Festival d'été is the biggest and perhaps most musically diverse festival in North America.

And with shows running until Sunday, July 13 and festival passes still available for a measly $78, it's a fabulous last-minute weekend getaway, regardless of musical taste.

"It's just such a walkable festival," says festival communications director Luci Tremblay. "You can go to a pop show in the afternoon, and if you don't like it, blues, rock, folk or hip hop are just a stroll through the old town away."

It's surprising that this festival is still virtually unknown outside of La Belle Province. Despite boasting past performers like Elton John, Wu-Tang Clan, Kanye West, The Arcade Fire, The Black Keys and countless other marquee acts, today only 12 per cent of festival goers come from outside Quebec.

Headliners still to come this weekend include Blondie, Billy Joel, Soundgarden, Sam Roberts Band, Third Eye Blind and Bryan Adams, with dozens of others sharing the bill.

Bucket list

Stop putting off the trip to India

If you've been thinking about India for a while, but haven't yet made the commitment to yourself, what's the hold-up? Granted, just the thought of the research you need to do is formidable, but once you block out the time (October to April when the temperatures are reasonable and the rains have stopped), you just have to make a list of both the tourist sites and the remote experience-based things that interest you and try for a bit of both. Insight Vacations has this all down pat, with premium guided tours from three to 14 days. Visit insightvacations.com/exotics.

- 2 potatoes, diced
- 1 onion, diced
- 1 green pepper, diced

- 1/3 cup (75 ml) slivered almonds, toasted

1. In 10 inch (25 cm) ovenproof nonstick skillet, heat oil over medium heat and cook, stirring often, potatoes, onion, pepper and garlic for 10 minutes or until golden.

2. In a bowl, whisk eggs and egg whites, oregano and black pepper. Pour evenly over vegetables in skillet and move around for egg to sink to the bottom. Place in preheated 375 F (190 C) oven for about 12 minutes or until knife inserted in centre comes out clean and top is light golden. Run a spatula around edge and gently slide the frittata onto cutting board; let cool slightly. Cut into 12 thick finger size pieces to serve.

Fresh Raspberry Salad

1. In large bowl combine spring mix, shallot, carrot and half of the raspberries; set aside the other half.

2. Place remaining raspberries in fine mesh sieve and using spatula press through into bowl to remove the seeds. Discard raspberry seeds. Whisk in oil, vinegar, chives, mustard, and pepper into puree. Drizzle over salad greens and toss to coat. Sprinkle with almonds.

Making the most of shmoozing solo

Networking without a net. If you're off to a professional event without an entourage, it's best to prepare a plan in advance

JACQUELINE MARTINZ
TalentEgg.ca

For some people, it's a nerve-wracking situation. Others don't like the small talk.

Even if they make you cringe, networking events are extremely valuable. They are an opportunity to explore the career options in a profession by speaking to those already working in it — and start making professional connections.

Here are a few tips that might also help you.

Do some extra preparation

Whether you're a seasoned networker or a networking novice, it can be a little intimidating to walk into a room full of strangers.

Help me hustle

If you have absolutely no idea where to start at an event, just ask the team who put it together.

If you're not used to attending events solo, spend extra time preparing. Try and set some tentative goals for the event. Are you looking to make a connection with a particular person or organization? Is there an industry career question you want to explore with an expert?

It's also a good idea to review your past work experience and identify some of your major accomplishments and interesting experiences — these can come in handy if a conversation ends up focused on you.

Talk to the event organizers

If you have absolutely no idea where to start at an event, just ask the team who put it together. Try to find out the names of the organizers online before attending the event — that way you know who to look for. Usually, you'll find the organizers near the entrance.

Introduce yourself and thank the organizers for putting the event together, then explain why you're attending.

There's a good chance the event organizers will have already connected with a number of people at the event. Ask if they're able to introduce you to someone who might be in your field or working at a company you'd like to learn more about.

Be bold and approach a table

Remember, the purpose of a networking event is to meet new people and increase your connections. There is no reason to be afraid to approach others.

Try to find a table with a couple of empty chairs and politely ask if you can join the group.

Introduce yourself, and contribute to the conversation.

Make sure to listen attentively and ask engaging questions — don't make the conversation about you.

When you decide it's time to leave, don't get up and walk away. Take a little time to say goodbye to people you had promising conversations with, and make sure you get the contact information of people you would like to connect with later. And don't forget, be sure to always thank the organizers as you leave the event.

TALENTEGG.CA IS CANADA'S LEADING JOB SITE AND ONLINE CAREER RESOURCE FOR COLLEGE AND UNIVERSITY STUDENTS AND RECENT GRADUATES.

Food for thought

Stand by the bar or near the snacks:

- Don't lurk in a corner! People will notice and you'll attract attention to yourself in a negative way.
- At networking events, most people will travel to the bar or food areas at least a few times. These locations are spots where you can easily start a conversation. Recommend a drink or snack option, and then proceed to introduce yourself.
- If you'd like to hear more from someone about their company or get career advice, ask if they'd like to join you at a table to continue the conversation. If the person has coworkers or friends at the event, tell them you'd appreciate being introduced so you can learn more about different facets of the industry.

World Cup. Germans break hearts of a nation after breaching Brazilian defence early and often

Brazil's Oscar falls to the pitch as the Germans celebrate their 7-1 win on Tuesday at Mineirao Stadium in Belo Horizonte. ROBERT CIANFLONE/GETTY IMAGES

With Neymar out injured, just about everyone in Brazil knew it would be tough against Germany.

Nobody ever expected this.

The Germans tore apart Brazil's porous defence time and time again Tuesday, routing the hosts 7-1 in the World Cup semifinals, the largest margin of defeat at this stage in the history of the tournament.

"We wanted to make the people happy ... unfortunately we couldn't," said Brazil defender David Luiz, who had scored in each of the last two matches. "We apologize to all Brazilians."

The astounding scoreline is sure to overshadow Miroslav Klose's record-setting 16th career World Cup goal. The strike pushed Klose past Brazil great Ronaldo, who was at the Mineirao Stadium on Tuesday as the Germans advanced to their eighth World Cup final.

Germany will face either Argentina or the Netherlands on Sunday at the Maracana Stadium in Rio de Janeiro with a chance to win for the fourth time.

Brazil was playing without Neymar, who was ruled out of the tournament with a broken vertebra, and suspended captain Thiago Silva.

The atmosphere at the start of the match was spine-tingling, but the euphoria of the yellow-shirted thousands soon turned to tears as the Germans scored five goals in the first 30 minutes — four of them in a seven-minute span.

The loss matched Brazil's most-lopsided defeat ever, and it's the first time the team has lost in an official competitive match on home soil since 1975, when Peru won 3-1.

Toni Kroos and Andre Schuerrle scored two goals each, while Thomas Mueller and Sami Khedira added the others. Oscar pulled a late goal back for Brazil.

"Brazil was shocked after the goals. They did not expect that. They did not know what to do," Germany coach Joachim Loew said. "Their defence was not organized. A little humbleness would not hurt now."

Clippers sale

Donald Sterling in court for trial

Donald Sterling, fighting his wife's planned $2-billion sale of the Los Angeles Clippers, arrived in court Tuesday to give testimony but sat stolidly as a psychiatrist testified that he's mentally incapable of handling financial affairs.

Sterling was ordered to take the witness stand after failing to appear for the start of the lawsuit trial on Monday afternoon. His lawyers are challenging the authority of Shelly Sterling under a family trust to unilaterally cut a deal for the team with former Microsoft CEO Steve Ballmer.

Leafs Loov promising Swedish prospects

Looking ahead. Viktor Loov's upside rivals that of fellow Swede Nylander

Viktor Loov will look to impress Toronto coaches and media at the team's prospects camp. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

If there is anyone with first-hand insight into top Maple Leafs draft pick William Nylander, it's his Modo teammate and fellow Toronto prospect Viktor Loov.

"Nylander is good. I would say he is one of the most skilled players to ever come from Sweden," Loov, a defenceman, said of Nylander. "He is a good skater, good with the stick, good offensively."

The two are among 29 players in Toronto this week for the team's prospects camp, where they learn nutrition, receive media training and get on the ice for drills.

When cameras are allowed in on Wednesday, Nylander is sure to draw a lot of attention. But it's Loov (pronounced Love) who is getting a lot of the buzz.

"Loov is very talented," said Jim Hughes, the team's director of player development who is running the prospect camp this week. "He's graceful on his skates. A big body that plays physical. He's looking for open-ice hits. He moves the puck, but what separates him is his skating ability.

"He skates on top of the ice. He doesn't lose any traction. He gains speed. He's got great power, great explosion, great acceleration. It makes everything in his game easier because his skating is so strong."

Loov is the latest in what's becoming a long line of late-round longshots who are paying off for the Leafs. The credit goes to the team's European scout, Thommie Bergman, who always seems to uncover a gem at the NHL draft.

And over the years, on his recommendations, the Leafs have drafted:

- Anton Stralman, a seventh-round pick in 2005 who has played 394 career NHL games and just cashed in with Tampa on a free-agent deal.
- Leo Komarov, a sixth-round pick in 2006, who is returning to the Leafs this season.
- Carl Gunnarsson, a seventh-round pick in 2007 who was just traded to St. Louis after 304 games in a Leafs jersey.
- More recently, there was Petter Granberg, a fourth-rounder from 2010 who got into one game last season and could well make the leap next season. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Argos. Toronto extends Ontario O-lineman Van Zeyl through 2016

The Toronto Argonauts have signed national offensive tackle Chris Van Zeyl to a contract extension through the 2016 season.

Van Zeyl was named a CFL all-star last season. He has played in 76 games, including 65 starts, in more than five seasons with the Argonauts.

The six-foot-six, 309-pound native of Fonthill, Ont., was part of the team's 100th Grey Cup winning season in 2012 while protecting star quarterback Ricky Ray.

"I am thrilled to extend my contract with the Argonauts," Van Zeyl said in a release. "Since I've been here, this team has made it a priority to fill our locker-room with exceptional players, as well as excellent coaches from whom I've learned so much. It is because of this commitment to excellence that I have been able to develop and flourish as a player here." THE CANADIAN PRESS

2014 Honda Odyssey

- Type. Four-door, 7- or 8-passenger full-size minivan
- Engines (hp). 3.5-litre V6 with cylinder deactivation (248)
- Transmission. Six-speed automatic
- Base price. Base $29,990, as-tested $32,045 (plus destination)

Market position

Only a handful of competitors remain in this segment, and manufacturers offer numerous features — along with incentives — to woo buyers away from alternatives. Honda scores with an excellent powertrain and roomy interior.

Points

- The top-line Touring includes an integrated vacuum cleaner to handle the inevitable minivan messes.
- Improvements to the 2014 model include minor styling changes, four-way power passenger seat on all models, and on the EX and up, a blind-spot display that shows up in the centre screen.
- The set-back front centre console leaves enough floor space so a purse or pack can be kept within easy reach.

The Odyssey handles extremely well, offering a car-like ride.

Interesting features

Rear-view camera, second-row climate controls, eight-way power driver's seat, Bluetooth streaming audio, front-seat anti-whiplash head restraints, three-row curtain airbags with rollover sensor.

Review. The Honda Odyssey offers light steering, a smooth, car-like ride and decent fuel economy

drive@metronews.ca

At one time, minivans were the top choice for family vehicles, but they fell out of favour as buyers went to SUVs and crossovers. Still, you can't beat them for moving a full load of passengers and cargo, and Honda's Odyssey is a standout.

It's pricey, ranging from $29,990 for the base LX to a high of $48,050 for the top-line Touring, but you do get a lot of features for the money. My tester was the SE, the next trim up from the base model, at $32,045.

The Odyssey uses a 3.5-litre V6 engine with a nifty cylinder deactivation feature. When you don't need full power, such as when you're cruising at a steady speed, the engine can run on four or even three cylinders to save fuel. It happens automatically, and so smoothly that it's almost impossible to feel the engine switch over. I averaged just 9.2 L/100 km in it, which is pretty good for a van this size, especially since I drove it most of the time with it loaded up.

Part of that fuel economy is also due to its six-speed automatic transmission, which is now used on all trim lines. On the 2013 models, only the top-end Touring had it, with all others using a five-speed automatic.

For its size, this minivan handles extremely well, with light but accurate steering, and a car-like ride that's smooth, but not so soft that it wallows around turns.

The Odyssey is definitely designed for practicality. There's a lot of room for accessing the third row, and the seats are very easy to fold flat when you need extra cargo space. The front console box can be taken out if desired, and the middle seat in the second row slides forward so those in the front can attend to a child in that seat.

Even the base trim line includes power front seats, a rear-view camera, Bluetooth, and USB interface. Before you automatically head to the SUVs, give the minivan one more look.

Shift: Environmentally friendly driving with fuel-cell electrics, hybrids and stop-start technology

Fiat Chrysler Automobiles (FCA) expands stop-start technology

First it was the 2014 Ram 1500 pickup that offered this fuel-conserving feature. For 2015, the system, which shuts off the engine when temporarily stopped in traffic, will be installed in all 2015 Chrysler 200 sedans with the standard 2.4-litre four-cylinder engine as well as Jeep Cherokee models fitted with the optional 3.2-litre V6. One unique feature of FCA's system is that it automatically deactivates when the steering wheel has been rotated more than 90 degrees, such as when stationary before making a sharp turn. As well, pushing a console-mounted button will turn the system off. Future plans call for stop-start to be installed as standard in virtually all FCA vehicles as more stringent fuel economy standards come into effect.

The 2015 Chrysler 200 will have start-stop technology, provided you order the base 2.4-litre four-cylinder.
ALL PHOTOS AND TEXT WHEELBASE MEDIA

Toyota shifts to fuel-cell electrics

Following the dissolution of its partnership with electric-car manufacturer Tesla, the Japan-based automaker has renewed its research-and-development focus on hydrogen-fuel-cell technology. Beginning in 2015, Toyota will introduce a production fuel-cell-equipped car that will initially be sold in Japan. The FCV will sell for the equivalent of $69,000 US in Toyota's home market, but there are plans to make it available in Europe as well as in North America where sufficient hydrogen fueling infrastructure exists. Despite growth of battery-electric-vehicle sales over the past few years, many automakers continue with fuel-cell electric technology, believing that it will eventually become "the" clean energy alternative.

Fuel-cell vehicles convert hydrogen to electricity, which means no plugging in to recharge. This is the Toyota FCV.

Shift points

- Ford's 1.0-litre turbo-charged "Ecoboost" engine has been named 2014 International Engine of the Year by a panel of 82 automotive journalists from 35 countries.
- The Acura ILX luxury compact sedan returns for the 2015 model year minus its hybrid powertrain option. Apparently a low "take" rate (translation: customers purchasing the hybrid version) was responsible for the cancellation. Earlier this year Honda announced that its slow-selling Insight hybrid hatchback would also be retired following the 2014 model year.
- Harley-Davidson is generating buzz with its plans to introduce 30 electric motorcycle prototypes under the LiveWire name. Now comes word that Bultaco, a motorcycle maker based in Barcelona, Spain, that has remained dormant since 1983, will return to business. This time it will make the electric Rapitan and Rapitan Sport bikes that use 53-horsepower electric motors.

Mitsubishi tests its hybrid mettle

You don't expect to find a mostly stock sport utility vehicle entered in a race that stretches roughly 2,160 kilometres from Thailand to Cambodia. But that's what Mitsubishi intends to do for the second year in a row with its Outlander PHEV. The plug-in all-wheel-drive, gasoline-electric hybrid will be entered in the yearly Asia Cross Country Rally that runs through mostly jungle from Aug. 9-15. Mitsubishi states that the entire drive system, comprised of a 2.0-litre four-cylinder engine plus a pair of 60-kilowatt (80-horsepower) electric motors that draw on a lithium-ion battery pack, are completely showroom stock, although the suspension and traction-control system have been reworked for severe off-road duty.

Don't let the decals fool you. This is basically a bone-stock Mitsubishi Outlander hybrid tall wagon.

Spreading my wings on a Thunderbird LT

Strong, solid and smooth. A test ride from the Daytona Pier turns up plenty of admirers for long touring bike

MARISSA BAECKER
drive@metronews.ca

It is easy to confuse the 2014 Triumph Thunderbird LT, a European import, with its North American cruisin' cousins.

The Triumph measures up so closely that during Bike Week in Daytona Beach, it is easily lost in the sea of glistening chrome creatures sunning themselves curbside.

My U.K. touring treasure, retailing for $17,999, camouflaged as an American road king with its trio of headlights, world's first radial white wall tires mounted on wide wire-spoke rims, heritage styled front fender and quick release saddlebags.

Throw a leg over this low-riding bagger, turn the key, push start and the differences soon take over.

I headed for the highway from the Daytona Pier at the foot of Atlantic Avenue and made my inaugural ride up the infamous Main Street.

I turned the heads of onlookers whose eyes caught my Triumph, as opposed to hearing it. With the never-ending drone of Reinharts or Vance & Hines, my quiet Thunderbird made a statement in silence with its twin-skin stainless steel 2 into 1 into 2 chrome-plated exhaust.

Riders began to roar as throttles opened up on the approach to the Main Street bridge running over the Halifax River. My Thunderbird spread its wings right past the "Please Ride Quietly" sign as I chuckled to myself.

Riding down the Florida freeway, I shifted smoothly through the belt-driven six-speed transmission without any unwanted shake or rattle as I rolled. The shifts were smooth and consistent with immediate response from the lower RPM torque — 111 ft-lb at 3550 RPM.

The liquid cooled 1699cc parallel twin powering this beast is the world's largest for a motorcycle and offers up 93 HP. Created in 2009 when the original Thunderbird was introduced, it is shared in the Triumph lineup with the Thunderbird Storm.

Marissa Baecker takes in the Atlantic sunrise in Daytona Beach, Fla., from the saddle of the 2014 Triumph Thunderbird LT. BRENDA KNIGHT

Housed on the 5.8 gallon tank is the dash console offering an easy to read (even in the mid-afternoon sun), analogue speedometer and fuel gauge, digital dual trip, odometer and clock scrolled through by handlebar switch.

As I watched the speedo creep up close to 70 mph, I was thankful for that extra protection that the large quick release windshield and side draft deflectors offered. Even at high speeds, the Thunderbird was strong, solid and smooth.

My Triumph was to be returned after a good night's sleep but not before I took advantage of catching an Atlantic sunrise on the white sand of Daytona Beach.

Ride and comfort

With the Thunderbird LT, there is no reason to call it a day before the sun goes down.

- Triumph has redesigned the saddle. With a low seat height of approximately 27 inches (700 mm), more backside room has been created, with additional padding (an extra 30 mm of seat foam) plus added lumbar back support.
- Accenting the ride comfort are ergonomic foot controls, heel/toe shifter and brake pad on full floorboards (floorboards for the passenger as well) and highway pegs.

Man-powered scooters drive commerce in DRC

What do you do when you need to deliver several hundred pounds of potatoes, 150 stalks of sugar cane, 30 eucalyptus saplings and eight sacks of coal, without motorized transport?

For residents of Goma, in the war-scarred east of the Democratic Republic of Congo, the answer to this, and many other problems, is the tshukudu.

A local but highly efficient tradition, the man-powered wooden scooters are everywhere on the paved highways and dusty side streets of Goma, holding their own with the motorcycle taxis.

They're operated by a group of 1,500 proud, often burly men who not only have their own union but saw a giant, gold-coloured statue erected in their honour a few years ago in this capital of North Kivu province, on the border with Rwanda.

"The tshukudu is our whole life," said driver Damas Sibomana.

Their vehicles, pronounced "chookoodoo", measure about two metres (more than six feet) long, have wide handlebars and a raised front wheel. They balance improbably large loads, as the tshukudeurs — as the drivers are known — push their vehicles along almost as much as they "drive" them.

Quoted

"The tshukudu is our whole life."

Damas Sibomana, tshukudeur

Many drivers live outside the city and their day begins by transporting agricultural products grown in the verdant hills to the north, which feed the city's markets. The good news? It's downhill.

Once in the city centre the drivers await further orders for deliveries or return, again fully loaded, back to their starting point.

Jean-Marie Firiki gets up at 4:00 a.m. but his descent stops in Kibumba, 30 kilometres to the north of Goma, which boasts of being the tshukudu's birthplace. The 35-year-old works as a tshukudeur at dawn and builds the machines during the day.

"A decent tshukudu costs $50," Firiki said. "But the cost of a beautiful one can be $80-100." — quite a sum in DR Congo, where the majority of people live in extreme poverty.

Men drive tshukudus in the Democratic Republic of Congo. AFP

But the boon is no fuel costs, and driver Sibomana says they can earn $10 on a good day.

There are no machines in the workshop that Fikiri shares with other craftsmen. Like most of the country, Kibumba has no electricity supply. The men work the wood — here it's eucalyptus — with a handsaw, a chisel, a plane and some sandpaper. It takes two days for a craftsman to make one scooter.

The first tshukudus were made entirely of wood and the wheels were greased with palm oil several times a day to keep their gears from seizing up. AFP

What not to bring on your road trip

When in doubt, leave it out. For the ultimate journey, ditch the whiney teens, bulky blankets and messy food

AUTO PILOT
Mike Goetz
drive@metronews.ca

There's nothing like a summer road trip with family and/or friends. The emotional highs and lows, the bonding, the making of mutual memories, and the one person that always seems to ruin it for everyone else — but who you all forgive at a later date because time heals all wounds and the distance lets you see some of the humorous aspects in all the conflict that went down.

And to help you get the most out of your next road trip, we've assembled a short list of things not to bring, because the list of things to bring has been done to death. Like how many times do you have to be reminded to bring along a variety of healthy snack options and some hand wipes?

People always bring too much stuff anyway, even if it's good stuff. I remember opening the side door of a minivan we rented in California once, and having to spend a few minutes rearranging things, just to find the kids!

The other aspect of "packing heavy" that just doesn't make any sense is packing "just in case" stuff that is readily accessible in the retail establishments lining the roadways you're actually traveling on. The vehicle doesn't have to be a completely self-contained ecosystem. You're not going to Mars; you are allowed to get out once in a while and buy things.

Okay, now on to more specific things you should not consider when packing for your next road trip, to help out your odds of making it a great one:

• Teenagers. If they want to stay home, let them.

• Dental floss, nail clippers, and hairbrushes. Okay in the trunk, but not where it might be accessible during drive time. Personal hygiene is not a spectator sport.

• Food you don't like. Because at some point, you will eat it, either out of hunger or boredom.

• Llamas. All big mammals are hard to travel with, but especially llamas.

• Just enough chewing gum for 80 percent of your passengers.

• Bulky blankets and pillows that will contribute to, and complicate, backseat border disputes.

• Over-folded maps that are now unreadable in the exact places you are headed.

• Any type of food product that, when spilled, will eventually find its way to the dark places where your car seats are bolted to the floorpan. Once there they cannot be retrieved. They will start nesting and multiply. Not saying don't bring Cheerios, but Cheerios are this type of food.

With less stuff to distract you, you can appreciate that view. ISTOCK

• Feet. If you can, leave feet at home. Feet are the first appendages that get antsy when cooped up too long; then they show up on the dash, in other people's personal space, and then out the window, hindering aerodynamics.
